

YESTERDAY'S ASSASSINATION.

At the present writing there is scarcely any hope that President Garfield will live until morning, and each telegram which comes from Washington has a more ominous import than those preceding. Throughout the entire country there is but one sentiment respecting the assassination, which was the work of a fanatical murderer, who seems to have deliberately planned the deed several days before. There is nothing so far to connect the assassination with anyone beyond Gittau. While he says he was acting in the interests of the Stalwarts, no one for a moment will imagine that the plan of the killing ever for an instant found a lodgment any where except in the crazy brain of the impecunious Chicago lawyer, who is represented as a combination of a half demented theorist and a rascal. While the death of the President will transfer the balance of political power to Arthur and Conkling, these men cannot afford to accept advantages arising from such circumstances, nor is it probable that they will. While the country is experiencing the shock of a great national calamity, there need be no serious results apprehended. The system under which a Republic is governed is an effective preventative of any bad results arising from a sudden interference with the machinery of government. There is not likely to be any political crisis or any financial panics. When Lincoln fell by the hand of Wilkes Booth the tragic surroundings of the assassination and the time, all combined to make the event one of stupendous interest. These tragic accessories are all wanting in the case of Garfield. The country passed safely through the killing of Lincoln and will do the same in the present instance. Such an event, coming in the midst of elaborate preparations to celebrate the anniversary of the nation's birthday, is a double blow, and will turn the festivities into scenes of sorrowful mourning. In the event of Garfield's death the country would be lacking in respect to its dead ruler to indulge in any semblance of a celebration, unless it were to drape the public buildings in black and march the military through the streets with muffled drums and reversed arms.

Since the above was in type the tenor of the dispatches has been much more encouraging, and at the present writing there is hope of Garfield's recovery.

A BREACH OF FAITH.

In another column will be found a communication from a citizen of Virginia City in regard to the manner in which Carson has been treated by a self constituted committee in Virginia City. We believe that the letter reflects the feeling in Virginia to-day rather than that which a crowd of agitators have attempted to create. A year ago a thousand people went to Virginia and joined the Comstock in a celebration with the express understanding that Carson should have a joint celebration with Virginia this year. The committee which had the original management of affairs in hand, acted with perfect fairness in the matter with an eye single to keeping faith with Carson. Another element, men who expected to turn a nimble dollar out of every man who remained at home, have succeeded in getting up an opposition which will result in two celebrations. The men who have led in this matter have simply forced Virginia to break faith with Carson and place the town on record as having indulged in a piece of bad breeding which a better sentiment will not countenance and which sensible reflection will look upon with regret. For many years past there has been similar troubles between Carson and Virginia and no man can point to a single instance in which Carson has forgotten that it had a reputation for courtesy to sustain and in all instances it has sustained it. It is claimed that the sole aim of Carson is to get a crowd down here who will spend money freely. While it is true that a few men in certain businesses expect naturally enough to make money from a large influx of visitors, such an imputation cast upon the city as a whole is a slur which merits silence rather than contempt.

A False Report.

Yesterday it was reported that Col. W. J. Sutherland on hearing of the shooting of Garfield, remarked that he was "glad of it and that it was none too soon." This is an injustice to Mr. Sutherland. Col. Davies informed an APPEAL reporter that he was with Mr. Sutherland when the news came and he remarked: "When in New York last week a prominent politician told me that he expected some trouble would grow out of the Albany difficulty which might lead to Garfield's assassination. This news does not surprise me."

He next talked with Mr. Sharp, of the Ormsby House, and said: "The man who fired the shots should have been strung up immediately," and then expressed regrets at the affair.
